
Appomattox County . . . Yesterday And Today

by Paul Ghiotto

"Appomattox lees/ no longer represent strife and woe and humiliation. Eternally it may stand as an example of the reunion of brothers who never must permit the strife of class to take the place of the strife of States, or ever by anything we do or leave undone, keep this America of ours from being the dedicated shrine of that sacred peace." Thus did Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman end his address as principal speaker at the McLean House dedication in the historical park 25 years ago on Sunday, April 16, 1950.

One writer described the atmosphere of that day's events in the following manner: "There was something of the carnival spirit along the approaches to the area designated for the dedication ceremonies . . . of homecoming in the greeting of relatives and old friends and the picnic lunches spread here and there."

Were you there? An estimated 18,000 to 20,000 persons were. According to highway officials, probably as many more, in 5,000 automobiles were unable to reach the village! The years may have taken their toll on your weight, hair thickness, suit style or hem length but if you were there, look closer. You're probably in there somewhere!

Virginias Fourth Forest Survey Now Under Way

Virginia's forest resources will be inventoried for the fourth time since the first survey was conducted in 1940. The 1966 survey pointed out the imbalance of cut over growth in the yellow pine species. The 1975 survey will be extremely helpful in short and long range planning, especially in the reforestation aspects of the forestry program and will provide vital information for Virginia's and the nation's forest industries in planning plant expansion or plant relocation, said State Forester W. F. Custard.

The forest survey is conducted by the United States Forest Service Experiment Station in cooperation with the Virginia Division of Forestry, continued Custard. Most of the more than 5,000 statistically located sample plots to be usd in gathering data are the same plots established for the 1955 and 1966 surveys.

The survey when completed will show by broad physiographic units the acreage of forest types present, volumn of timber present, timber growth since the last survey, the drain on the forest resources, reversion of farm lands to forest, and forestland to other uses. Another feature will include data on present land use, wildlife and recreational use of forestland, and ther watershed values of the forests. This year's survey will also seek to show the ravages of disease and insects in the forest as well as the extent of such inhibiting vegetation as honeysuckle, which is becoming more and more of a forest regeneraion problem.

One of the most significant items to be determined will be the acreage of the several forest types.timber age classes and land use categories. This date is of the utmost importance in planning the best use of the forest resource in the years to come s.ne the forest resource, unlike oil, mineral and coal resources, is renewable, said Custard.

The forest survey teams were oriented to the Virginia program on February 3 and began taking date in Surry and Southampton Countieson February 4. The State has been divided into five survey units-Costal Plain, Southern Piedmont, Northern Piedmont, Northern Mountain, and Southern Mountain-- and will be surveyed in that order. The project is expected to be completed by January, 1977.Interim reports will be available following completion of each survey unit, concluded State Forester Custard.
